The Heron unit specialises in supporting people living with Dementia. At the time of the inspection there was 48 people living in the service.

The systems in place allowed people to be admitted to the home safely. Each unit was separated to prevent cross infection. There was no movement of residents between units and staff movement was kept to a minimum.

A detailed risk assessment was in place for ensuring safe visits, this included a booking system, to allow for social distancing, visitor agreement form, health screening and use of PPE.

Local restrictions on visiting were in place at the time of the inspection and alternative measures such as video calls were being used. The home had also purchased a purpose built outside visiting pod to allow safe visits when national restrictions allowed.

The home sent regular updates to family members to update them on current visiting restrictions in the home with assurances about how they were managing.
